President's Message

"Getting Started"

By Chris Haven

“W hen I wear

polo shirt with the AAA logo around town, people want to talk about it. Inevitably they ask what it takes to get their son or daughter, or sometimes themselves, started on acquiring a private pilot's license. Achieving that first big milestone - the private pilot ticket - is no small feat. Not unlike for a first-generation college student or first-time triathlete, it takes a plan and a community to move new pilots forward into a field with which they may have little practical experience.

The paths to aviation are as varied as those who fly. By telling your own story to an aspiring pilot, you pull aside the curtain and show how it can be accomplished. Was it military experience, growing up in Alaska, paying your dues working at the airfield in trade for dual time, having use of someone else's plane, or waiting a long time until you could pay for a few more hours?

However you did it, polish your elevator speech and tell your story! It's one small way you can help address the pilot shortage, and further our mission of inspiring young people to fly.

Clear Skies,
Chris Haven
President

This month's speaker will be Brice Corcoran. Brice is a young aviator and AAA scholarship winner who is progressing along well in his career. He's currently flying air-refueling operations, and will be speaking to us the day he arrives back home from overseas deployment.

His talk will be very interesting to all, particularly young people interested in ways to advance their own aviation career. Hope to see you there.

As The Prop Turns

by Mike Duncan

Well Santa Clause managed to get recurrent for the season. His sleigh has been annual-ed along with the reindeer completing their fitness tests. It is pretty amazing how that jolly old soul can stay so proficient with only twenty four hours a year of flying. While not as experienced as Santa, Brian Hausback has managed to do his first solo in a Cessna 172 with Scott Woodland as his instructor.

Congratulations Brian and Scott on a job well done.

For those who do not already know, our local hero Col. "Bud" Anderson was given an honorary promotion to Brigadier General.

On December 2, 2022,
at the Aerospace Museum of California at McClellan, a promotion ceremony took place with over two hundred people in attendance. Included in the crowd were two retired Generals and one retired Admiral. Additionally, several Congressmen had their representative there to honor him along with some local politicians. His new one stars were pinned on by General Brown who flew in from Washington D.C. for the ceremony. General Anderson retired from the military after 30 years in the Air Force and then went on to work for McDonald Douglas at the Edwards AFB for another twelve years as the Manager of the Company Flight Test Facility. His biggest project was the F-15, which is still in use today. After retirement he moved to Auburn with his wife, Ellie, and wrote a book called "To Fly and Fight" about his memories of WWII and becoming a "Triple Ace". A second book was to follow about his friendship with General Yeager (Press – On) and their adventures hiking in the Sierra. General "Bud" Anderson became active in promoting aviation not only in Auburn but all over the world. You might see him at Wings Restaurant while he continues to be active as a mentor and role model for all generations, even at 100 years old. Congratulations Sir on your promotion.

The Highway Patrol got a new Christmas present, a brand new Cessna Caravan. While it is not unusual to see a Caravan land at Auburn, it is unusual to see one in CHP livery. It showed up in Auburn the other day with all its bells and whistles. One of the nice things about this office of the CHP is that they usually get the first of the new gadgets and do the "Beta testing" on them. Feel free to go up and look at your tax dollars working for you. I am sure they will be more than happy to show off their new Christmas present.

Tammy Meredith was featured in an article in AOPA Pilot magazine. The article is featured in this month's newsletter courtesy of AOPA. Please take some time to read about her and her adventures in Alaska and the trials and tribulation she has gone through.

Well that is about all for this month. Good Night Miss Daisy and have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, to all.

Passion meets community

'Fighter' pilot overcomes cancer, returns to the sky

BY EMMA QUEDZUWEIT

TAMMY MEREDITH GREW up regaled with stories from her father, who was a U.S. Air Force ground refueler at Kimpo Airbase in the Korean War, and during her childhood they went to countless airshows together. If there were ever airplane rides being offered, she and her dad were on one as often as they could afford. Throughout adulthood, aviation remained in the back of her mind, but because she always heard flying was difficult and took a lot of money, she never seriously considered becoming a pilot.

Then one day, she saw an advertisement for a discovery flight at Auburn Municipal Airport (AUN) in Northern California. She was nearing retirement and reconsidering learning to fly, so she took the discovery flight. Her interest was instantly reignited and she was off and running, training as often as possible and soaking up everything she could learn. Then she got a job at Sunshine Flyers—one of the on-airport flight schools—and suddenly, aviation became a bigger part of her life. She began meeting pilots, being up close to aircraft, and learning by immersion.

In January 2018 her dream came true when she passed her private pilot checkride, and she began enjoying the best of what general aviation has to offer—her favorites being the simple joys of flying, seeing new places, and meeting new people.

But a new challenge arrived in her life. A year and a half after getting her certificate, she was diagnosed with breast cancer and underwent aggressive chemotherapy. So began her years-long fight with both health and financial adversities.

Through it all, Meredith's aviation family was a pillar of care and support. The Auburn Airport community and the Sierra Gold (then Placer Gold) chapter of The Ninety-Nines, International Organization of Women Pilots, organized a fundraising event at the airport to support her treatment that included things like auction items, airplane rides, and more. "You realize how lucky you are, and how it makes a huge difference to have that support," she said. Her family members, who are not involved in aviation, were amazed and touched by the generosity of the tight-knit aviation community.

Meredith's recovery has been long, but her determination to keep flying never wavered. She continued steadily at her own pace, investing time as she could, because giving up was never an option. In the summer of 2022, she was finally able to take a long-desired first step toward pursuing a seaplane rating at Alaska Floats and Skis in Talkeetna, Alaska. Flying a 1951 Piper PA-20 Tri-Pacer on floats was another dream come true, and she enjoyed a thrilling time flying in the Alaska backcountry with the instructors.

However, strong fatigue—a lingering effect of chemotherapy—flared up more than she anticipated, and it became clear that she would not be able to complete

Tammy Meredith did most of her training in a Cessna 172, but she treasures her flying experiences in a Piper Cub on skis and a Tri-Pacer floatplane. She participates in animal rescue flights and founded an animal rescue in her community.

the accelerated course in time. Despite the disappointment of this setback, she determined to stay positive, appreciating the opportunity to build skills and have fun.

"I'm so lucky to be able to do what I do," she said. Her passion for aviation is stronger than ever, and her goal is to keep flying no matter what it takes, even if that might look a little different for a while. "If I have to keep flying with another pilot for safety reasons, then so be it."

"If you really want to do it, don't give up or let people talk you out of it," she said. "Find your inner circle that share your passion, or who are going through the same thing. Talk to them and accept their support. From aviation I learned that people are genuinely nice and want to help you reach your goals, and these people will help you get through it, cheer you on, and want to see you succeed." ■

Mach 5 Musings

from the Mach 5 Aviation Cluhouse

December seems to have posed challenges felt by all pilots at the Auburn Airport, what with the low ceilings, visibility, and stormy weather – all of which have made the more VFR days prime, competitive real estate on our schedule.

While the inclement weather has necessitated practicing good ADM and pausing the training of several students, we would still like to give a shout-out to those that have managed several tremendous accomplishments: Michael B. obtained his IFR rating on November 27th; Tzonu G. obtained his commercial license on December 8th, Liam L. obtained his commercial license on December 21st, and Rick V. obtained his private pilot license on December 28th. A special shout-out goes to Nancy C., who won a partnered scholarship with the non-profit Girls Love to Fly and Mach 5 Aviation!

Downtime with the weather has allowed us to focus more on maintenance for Mach 5. Our Piper Cherokee, N5233L, and Piper Arrow II, N4443X, are now back in action after both aircraft were fitted with new engines and props.

Solitary days under rainy clouds have led to some unique sightings around the airfield, like spotting coyotes wandering around C-172s and taking shelter under wings, or listening to someone fly the RNAV 7 approach and go missing without eyes on the ground ever spotting them. On our better days, it's humbling to remember that Auburn is truly special with how it avoids the Tule fog and Sierra snowline. The memories and Musings for our little airport and community are what we'll take into the year 2023 – see ya there!
